Packey McFarland of Chicago toyed with One-Round Hogan, the Californian lightweight, for nine rounds at the Fairmont A. C. last night, and Hogan then showed that his sobriquet of "One-Round" is not a misnomer by taking the honors in the tenth. Excepting this one round, Hogan appeared little better than a novice against the clever Chicagoan, and it was not until the ninth round that he managed to get over a real stinging punch to McFarland. Hogan's showing was hardly as good as that of Kid Burns at the same club a few weeks ago, because last night the Californian did not evince even the desire to mix which Burns showed at times in his bout.

Although McFarland romped away with the honors in a manner that left no doubt as to his superiority over the Californian, his work was hardly up to the standard expected. He landed on Hogan as often as he pleased, and kept Hogan from doing any real damage to him, but he also failed to hurt the Californian. Many of his punches were wasted on Hogan's arms, and at times, when a few hard wallops seemed to have the Californian ready for some decisive punches, Packey fell into a clinch and grinned. It was easy enough, and he evidently did not want to take any advantage of the opportunity to cause the Californian more trouble. Packey's work lacked that decisive something that is generally expected from a boxer who so completely outclasses an opponent as McFarland outclassed Hogan.

McFarland did not hit as cleanly as in his other bouts here. Neither did he show the punching power or the desire to get in and mix matters. He had things all his own way from start to finish, but showed no desire to put on the speed lever until the eighth round, when Hogan hit him on the nose and drew the blood. Then he got angry and mixed with Hogan.

Hogan was the biggest kind of a disappointment all the way. The right hand that did so much damage against Knock-out Brown might as well have been tied to his side up to the tenth round, and the clever attack which was supposed to have developed since his defeat by Ad Wolgast was an absent quantity. Hogan appeared scared in the early part of the battle, and his work was mainly on the defensive all the way. He had the utmost respect for Packey's cleverness, and he showed it in his every move during the bout. A right swing to the head in the ninth round and a few hard right uppercuts and straight rights to Packey's face in the tenth tell the whole story of Hogan's attack. In the other rounds he was the pupil and Packey was the demonstrator.

The largest crowd that has ever been jammed into the Bronx clubhouse witnessed the contest. At 7 o'clock, almost two hours before the entertainment began, the bleacher seats around the auditorium were well filled, and when the two boxers crawled through the ropes shortly after 10 o'clock there was not an inch of available standing room that was unoccupied. More than 3,000 enthusiasts dug their elbows in their neighbors' ribs for the pleasure of seeing the boys perform.
